I'm just curious if you are musical at all or if you sing, play or write?

I realize there are several things that make a relationship work or not... but this is the most important one in my life and probably couldn't live without. If I went deaf I would still hear rhythm, melody, harmony, chordal movements, textures... what we choose and write tells us what's inside even if we say the opposite.

Many of our best creative musical minds were abused and wrote to affect beauty and love into their lives and felt that only through their music would they be worthy of love.

There are so many things that make a person a musical being... and someone who is into the performance and other aspects of music. And through those things things really do know a sizable portion about that person's inner being, emotional health and soul. Especially what they write. The parts we sing along to, the ones we love AND the ones we can't stand…

But everyone likes some music… I want to know another maker, like myself. A maestro… someone who is not feircely dedicated, but just IS.

I'm a prolific musician and tech. I sing very well and play instruments in every discipline and make a great living from tech and repair/restore.

There's not a GD thing wrong with me! LOL spent 16 yrs. with the a talented performer, before she died. We met on a dating site, too, so it's possible.

Everyone is here for a reason & I expect my mate to be musical, capable of adult relationships & appreciate how rare true love, talent, and creativity are. Beauty & life are gifts, so be gracious.